

Since Michael Jackson's death, impersonators in cities all over the world have been featured in tributes to the late entertainer. Although there have been imitation Michaels performing in Las Vegas and other venues for years, the singer's death has created a new wave of impersonators who are cashing in on the tragedy.

Just within the past few weeks, new impersonators have appeared in Moscow, Hong Kong, Tokyo, Berlin, London, Paris and many other cities. Jackson's audios and videos are once again on the best-seller lists. After fading popularity during his final years, because of his sudden death, the Michael Jackson image has once again become a major industry.
