

As if it weren't cramped enough already for creaky seniors flying economy. Get ready to squoosh! Seating spaces are reducing in American Airlines passenger compartments. The plan is to cut another two inches from each row.

Of course, in case you haven't noticed, other airlines are also doing more squeezing for the same obvious reason. By sardining added bodies into the passenger areas, they'll make more money. However, it could get worse on Delta and United, because it will give their goons less space for dragging passengers down the aisles and out the door.
