

Curiosity killed the cat, so just peeking into the mini bar could automatically show up as catastrophic room charges. Even if you don't take anything, the employee who daily checks the little boxes could miscount and add charges.

When you check out, carefully read your hotel's itemized bill, and if you see wrong mini bar charges, dispute them. Most front desk clerks will cancel the charges.